

Tunnel Ridge Road. I came across some hikers, showed them my map and asked where state Route 77 and Tunnel Ridge Road intersect.

They laughed and pointed down into the canyon. You can't get from state Route 77 to Tunnel Ridge Road. That's because Tunnel Ridge Road is on the ridge top 500 feet or more above state Route 77. The state route goes through the tunnel at the bottom. The two roads cross in a way, but you can't get from one to the other.

That's a map problem you usually don't encounter in Ohio.

But Kentucky's Red River Gorge, part of 689,000-acre Daniel Boone National Forest, is a lot different from Ohio. It's more like southern Utah's slick rock country with the stone arches and overhanging rock ledges called rock shelters.

There are more than 100 sandstone arches in the 25,630-acre Red River Gorge Geological Area in Powell, Menifee and Wolfe counties. The arches were sculpted by water and wind 70 million years ago and are the result of the resistance of sandstone to erosion as softer rocks below washed away.

The gorge, with the greatest concentration of arches and natural bridges east of the Rocky Mountains, is known for its number, size and variety of its arches. It is a rugged place with

Please see Wild, G2

Abbey conjures Harry Potter

Medieval English building attracts young fans seeking to retrace wizard's footsteps

By Kristin Jackson
Seattle Times

LACOCK, ENGLAND: A multinational pack of children roamed through the ancient cloisters and stone-pillared rooms of England's Lacock Abbey.

They hadn't come for the abbey's medieval architecture or the postcard-perfect historic village adjoining it.

They came for Harry Potter.

Scenes in two movies based on the wildly popular novels about the young wizard were filmed at the 13th-century Lacock Abbey.

"Look, look, it was here," squealed a

HUNTING FOR HARRY POTTER

Take a tour or find movie locations on your own. Page G4.

French girl. She reverently touched a 500-year-old iron cauldron in a room that served as a classroom in Hogwarts, the wizards' school that Harry Potter attends.

Two giggling British schoolgirls peered into a courtyard where Harry was filmed with his magical owl, Hedwig, then skipped along the cloistered walkway around the courtyard, which served as a school corridor in the films Harry Potter and the Sorcerer's Stone (called

Please see Potter, G4

Daniel Radcliffe plays Harry Potter again. The third film came out Friday.

JACKSON/Seattle Times via KRT
England's Lacock
the 13th century.

